There is scarcely enough water in Ridgewood reservor to last even with the utmost care, over twelve or thirteen hours. The situation will be largely attended. serious by this afternoon unless something is done before then to remedy it. Heroic measures were adopted to make the present supply of water last as long as possible, or until relief comes, and a number of great industries in the city will be at a standsulli for at least one day. All factories using water have been ordered to shut down, so as to save water for the necessities of the general public. The great engine which runs the cable on Brooklyn bridge has been stopped, and as many people as possible are being shoved acress the bridge by locomotives. All fires under boilers at the Brooklyn navy yard are out and work entirely suspended. Water is shut off from the boilers in all the hotels and office buildings, and as a consequence not an elevator in the whole city is running this morning. Work in every factory where steam is depended on for the motive power is suspended, and the number of those thrown out of work runs far above fifty thousand. It is hoped repairs can be completed by to-night, but well informed persons say the work tannet be finished before to morrow noon at the earliest.
